The Free Rider Problem in Group Assignments

Fathimah Azzahra, Aminath Samiyya, Anis Zuana bt. Ab Salam¹⁰² and Saim Kayadibi

Introduction

Sometimes working in groups can be a great exercise in building social, team-work and leadership skills. It allows you to become more aware and sensitive to other people's characters and also it teaches you to appreciate other people's work. At times, it can be successful and an activity can be done more efficiently, however, at other times, it can be disastrous, leading to discomfort and quarrels between group members.

Many university courses today incorporate a group project. Students are formed into groups and assigned a task designed to generate a outcome of some kind. It may be difficult for perfectionists, because it makes it difficult to appreciate others' work because they want things done a certain specific way. Sometimes, it is difficult to even be working in groups for certain things because the work is difficult to divide amongst members, especially in groups with large numbers of people. Work may be unevenly divided, with one person doing more than the others and this is unfair
