Abū al-Ḥassan ‘Alī ibn Ismā‘il al-Ash‘arī was known as the founder of the orthodox philosophical theology, the school which defended the faith with arguments or reason. The school was named after him as Ash‘arism. Al-Ghazālī (his full name was Abū Ḥāmid Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad al-Ghazālī) was one of the leading masters of Ash‘arite school. Some of al-Ghazālī’s theological methods showed a new approach from the traditional teachings of the As‘arite School. This paper attempts to present the difference between al-Ash‘arī’s ideas in Istiḥsān ‘an khaḍ fī ‘ilm al-kalām and al-Ghazālī’s work of Iljām al‘awām ‘an ‘ilm al kalām.

In Istiḥsān, al-Ash‘arī deals with the objections raised by the extremely orthodox against the use of kalām, and the replies given by al-Ash‘arī, justifying its use in matters of faith. Al-Ash‘arī justifies theological discussions about matters of faith in three ways; first, he
