4.1 INTRODUCTION

In the era of technology, globalisation and modernisation, International law cannot be ignored and overlooked with the spate of migration of people out of their countries to seek employment. The whole world is now accessible, from one end to the other in just seconds through internet, telecommunication, shipping and aviation industries, to name but a few. Hence, International laws have become part of the daily lives of most people. Further, the international community over the past years have taken great interest in the subject of migration. Various groups, organisations and commissions, have been set up to remedy the problems faced by migrant workers. These commissions include the Global Commission on International Migration, the Geneva Migration Group, International Organisation for Migration (IOM), Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and International Labour Organisation (ILO). This chapter will focus on the contributions of ILO in regulating labour standards for migrant workers and the effect of various United Nations (UN) conventions in promoting and protecting the rights of migrant workers.
