PSYCHOLOGY IN MALAYSIA

Current Research and Future Directions

Noraini M. Noor
Mariam Adawiah Dzulkifli
Contents

Foreword ............................................................................................................................... iii
Preface ................................................................................................................................. v
Contributors ....................................................................................................................... ix

Part I Current Research

1. The Self and Shame in the Malay Context: A Qualitative Study ........ 2
   Nadjer Akhouche & Noraini M. Noor

2. Cultural Age Norms for Transitional Life Events in the Malaysian Society ........................................ 39
   Shamsul Haque

3. Multiple Effects of Rail Passenger Crowding: Evidence from Malaysia .................................................. 54
   Nor Diana Mohd. Mahudin

4. Industrial and Organisational Psychology in Malaysia: A Review of Research Areas and Research Variables ...................................................... 75
   Maisarah Mohd. Taib & Alizi Alias

5. Demographic Predictors of Family Relationships during Adolescence .................................................. 111
   Lihanna Borhan

6. Person-centred Approach to Counselling: Indicators of Personal Growth Experienced by Malay Clients .................. 127
   Maridiana Mohanad & Asnarulkhadi Abu-Samah

7. Personal and Professional Characteristics of Clinical Psychologists in Malaysia: A Preliminary Study .................. 152
   Ng Wai Sheng & Sue H. Bae
Part II  Non-Empirical Papers

8. Clinical Psychology in Malaysia: Issues and Opportunities .......... 182
   Alvin Ng Lai Oon

9. Patient Safety .................................................................................. 221
   Harris Shah Abd Hamid

10. Play Therapy with Children: The Malaysian Context ................. 235
    Junita Nawawi

11. Memory, Ageing and Alzheimer’s Disease:
    The Case for Malaysia ................................................................... 260
    Mariam Adawiah Dzulkifli

12. Understanding the Cognition of Malaysians ................................. 273
    Lin Mei-Hua

Part III  Psychology in Malaysia: Future Directions

13. Psychology in Malaysia: Current Trends and Future Directions .... 290
    Shukran Abdul Rahman

14. Psychology in Malaysia: Looking Ahead ........................................ 318
    Noraini M. Noor
Person-centred Approach to Counselling: Indicators of Personal Growth Experienced by Malay Clients

Mardiana Mohamad & Asnarulkhadi Abu-Samah

Introduction

Person-centred approach to counselling was developed by Carl Rogers (1902–1987) in the United States based on the principles of humanistic psychology. Humanistic psychology emphasises the present experience and the essential worth of a whole person; promotes creativity, free choice and spontaneity; and fosters the belief that people can solve their own problems. As the proponent of the humanistic tradition, the person-centred approach stresses on the unique capacity of each individual to self-realisation and personal growth. As a result, the approach focuses more on human creativity, authenticity and internal locus of evaluation with a belief in the uniquely human aspects of experience, including personal choices, interpersonal relationships, intentions, purposes and transcendental or spiritual experiences, instead of stressing on efforts to change the individual personality and behaviour through the intervention of an expert therapist.

From the beginning of its development, the person-centred approach has been applied to a range of clients: normal, neurotics and psychotics (Farber, Brink, & Raskin, 1996). The generality of application of the person-centred approach has been supported by the fact that it has been utilised for a wide