1. Introduction

Generally speaking, al-Turath al-Islami or Islamic heritage or al-turath in short refers to all the legacies left behind by Muslim individuals and societies throughout Islamic history (Sultan, 1991; Muhammad, 2004). Such legacies can be physical, for instance arts, buildings and they can be abstract such as intellectual properties - on which this chapter will focus. Al-turath constitutes an important reference point for the Ummah. The two primary sources of al-turath are the Quran and the Sunnah. Both connect the Muslim Ummah to their origin and past, provide them with a sense of identity and belongingness and, give them guidance on how to conduct their lives. Both sources also define and explain the relationships of the members of the Ummah with their creator, with one another and with their environment. In short, al-turath is itself the foundation of the Ummah’s existence, direction, development and prosperity. The success of the Muslim Ummah throughout history has primarily depended on them being steadfast in adhering firmly to and integrating the lessons from al-turath in its letter and spirit to their day to day affairs. This of course is in line with their
