GREETINGS FROM THE CHAIRPERSON

Sleman, 16 November 2021

Dear ICONISSS presenters and participants,

The International Conference with the theme "Discovering New Landscape of Islamic Studies and Social Sciences in The Digital Age" is part of an academic effort and "ijtihad" to answer and discover a new landscape in Islamic studies and Social Sciences. At this forum, various Islamic and social science scholars are trying to innovate and find a new landscape of challenges for Islamic studies and the increasingly complex social sciences. One discipline today cannot stand alone without the need for other disciplines. Islamic studies today really need a variety of contemporary social science approaches to criticize, correct, and complement the previously unthinkable weaknesses and are now happening. The development of the industrial revolution 4.0 is a new challenge in all aspects, especially in the religious and social life of the Muslim community.

Meanwhile, Islamic studies primarily focus on scriptural studies (holy books), religious adherents (communities of religious adherents), rites or religious practices, and religious institutions or organizations. On the other hand, the development of information industry technology has entered a new phase with the digitalization era. The consequences of the development of this era of information industry technology, for example, as an example of religious authority which used to be centered on a cleric/kyai, but now has shifted to the authority of online media, it seems that the proliferation of online recitations, online fatwas, online rituals, the use of Quranic applications and online interpretations is part of the new field of Islamic studies with a social science approach. This change in information media will undoubtedly change the character of Muslim society in the current contemporary era. The emergence of the Z-generation, where social media strongly influence their lives, will undoubtedly change the mindset, mindset, and behavior in religious life and society. In social interactions, for example, the emergence of online Friday prayers in the pandemic era, online economic transactions, searching for religious references online are part of the few examples that occur in Muslim society today.

Thus, it is necessary to have a new paradigm, a new landscape, to discover how Islamic studies focus not only on normative-doctrinal and scriptural approaches but also on the empirical-social and actual levels. Several questions should be asked at this international conference. First, what are the problems that arise in Islamic thought and religious practice in this digital era? Second, what is the impact on the religious thoughts and practices of the Muslim community in this digital era? And the third question, how should Islamic studies and Social Science studies be formulated in this digital era. Of course, the questions above reflect new changes due to the emergence of new media in the digital era today. It is, of course, as Max Weber conveyed, the change from an agrarian society to an industrial society will undoubtedly change the character and behavior of the people.

Best regards,

ABSTRACTS

DIGITAL SERVICES AND SOCIAL STABILITY:
EVALUATING THE IMPACT FROM A MAQASIDIC APPROACH

During the Covid-19 epidemic, there was an urgent need for many countries in the world to move as quickly as possible towards digital services such as e-government, e-learning, and e-commerce. The positive aspects of this transformation cannot be overlooked; however, other negative effects may result from the long and medium term of such an approach. For instance, do all governments can provide Internet access to serve the interests of their citizens. Therefore, this research will ask: what are the effects of the increasing trend towards digital services and how can they affect societal stability? How can these effects be dealt with from a Maqasidic approach? To answer these questions, the researcher used the inductive approach to collect information on the subject matter and related concepts, terms and opinions related to digital services and social stability. Also, the analytical approach will show the effects of digital services on social stability with a specific focus on Maqasid Shariah. Among the most prominent results of the research are that: quality of information accessibility, equality, social trust, social cohesion, and community engagement are the main aspects that can be affected by digital services. Therefore, moving towards digital services must be directed by Maqasid al-Shariah as a frame to maintain social stability and peace.
